1. According to CAM, what is "institutionalized disconfirmation" and why is it important?
 1. Institutionalized disconfirmation is being able to counter any credible idea. It is important for college campuses to allow institutional disconfirmation because it allows for students to create their own opinions and hear out not only the left side, but the right side as well. Today, many colleges are filled with leftist who often express their opinions without another credible source to challenge them making many students have very leftist believes.
